Visit a State Park

America's state parks have always provided an ideal setting for stretching your legs, but there's more to them now. Trails and bike paths are often less crowded than usual. Hike or stroll through the natural splendor, or take an view to the for a helping dose of breathtaking views. You'll soon realize that what makes these parks so special is not just the scenery, there's a lot to discover for everyone of the great outdoors. A prepacked picnic in a secluded spot is sure to bring some much-needed peace and serenity.

Take a Weekend Camping Trip

For those looking to fill their weekends with their personal adventures, a camping excursion may be just the ticket. Whether you're snacking the TV or looking up the car with overnight necessities (sleeping bags, tent, bug spray, food), it's a relaxing way to take in the beauty of the outdoors. Before you hit the road, be sure to research which camping sites are open for business and what they're doing to keep up with social distancing guidelines.
