Stay safe at the pump...and save money while doing it

SHUTTERSTOCK

There's at least one guarantee in these uncertain times - your car still needs fuel. It's important to stay safe at the pump, whether you're heading out for quick errands, hitting the road for a longer trip, or simply cruising around to get some fresh air and a (perhaps much-needed) change of scenery.

Get tips to help you stay safe and reduce contact at the pump and test your fuel efficiency knowledge to be sure you're getting the most out of every trip.

Staying Safe at the Pump

Timing is everything Think of the busiest times people go to the gas station—rush hour, lunch breaks—and then do the opposite to avoid the crowd. A 2019 GasBuddy study found Monday and Tuesday mornings are the least crowded times at gas stations, making them a smart bet. If the pumps are full, have patience and use that time to put on your mask, sanitize your hands, and gather what you'll need when it's your turn.

Contactless payment is the way to go The less you touch, the better. Use a napkin to grab the fuel nozzle. Paying by cash, check, or even credit card means additional points of contact. There's a better way. The Exxon Mobil Rewards+™ app lets you pay directly from your phone. You never need to leave your car, because no card swipe is required. Bonus? AARP members can now earn more rewards on fuel, convenience store, and car wash purchases with this new exclusive member benefit.

Saving Money and Getting Rewarded

With knowledge comes savings! There are some basic steps you can take to help reduce your fuel consumption...and also get rewards along the way. Take the short 4 question quiz below to learn how.
